

Keir Starmer

Prime Minister of Great Britain

Good jobs drive our country forward.

Good jobs with good wages that put money in people's pockets to support their family better and spend more on the high street so that communities benefit.

Thriving families, thriving businesses and a thriving economy.

Everything this Labour Government does is about creating better jobs, with better wages, in every part of the UK.

Labour is working to get Britain on the up again. Backing British workers, British industries and British jobs, with 380,000 jobs created since the election.

- New investment in energy security and nuclear power, supporting more than 10,000 jobs.
- New investment to save jobs – including British steel and car manufacturing – and create good jobs in energy, infrastructure and artificial intelligence.
- New trade deals with the EU, India and the USA, growing our economy by at least £13.8 billion every year, creating jobs, raising wages and opening up markets for British businesses.
- A Modern Industrial Strategy making the UK the best place to invest and create good jobs that you'd want your children to work in.
- £39 billion for affordable housing – the biggest investment in a generation, to help deliver the homes and jobs Britain needs.
- New investment in transport connecting places better and helping to create local jobs.
- Making work pay by increasing the minimum wage, giving 3 million workers a pay rise of up to £1,400 a year. Stronger rights at work, protecting workers from unfair dismissal and supporting parental leave.

Reform and the Tories can't and won't match our investment in renewing Britain and backing British jobs.

They opposed Labour's Budget to fund the NHS, schools and public services. They oppose our investment in transport, housing and energy. They don't back our trade deals. They want to see British workers' rights slashed, not improved.

There's still much to do. Change doesn't come overnight. But Labour investing in Britain's future and Britain is turning the corner.

Yours sincerely,
